C Countries & cultures Länder & Kulturen

Das englische Wort friend hat nicht immer die gleiche Bedeutung wie das deutsche Wort ‚Freund‘. Friend wird im Englischen viel häufiger benutzt, auch für relativ flüchtige Bekanntschaften. Eine Umfrage hat ergeben, dass der Durchschnittsengländer 37 friends hat, während der Durchschnittsdeutsche nur fünf Freunde angibt! Fragt man nach, stellt man fest, dass der Begriff inhaltlich anders besetzt ist, sodass Mitleid mit den scheinbar kontaktarmen Deutschen überflüssig wäre.

Im Englischen werden auch Nachbarn und Kollegen als Freunde bezeichnet. In britischen Betrieben geht man mit Kollegen oft nach der Arbeit kurz ins Pub und tauscht auch Privates aus. Das Verhältnis unter Kollegen in deutschen Firmen kommt Briten daher oft distanziert vor. Auch Urlaubsbekanntschaften werden als friends bezeichnet und sogar Menschen, die man bei einem Pub-Besuch kennengelernt hat! Während man in Deutschland zuerst den Familiennamen austauscht, nennt man in englischsprachigen Ländern beim Kennenlernen oft nur den Vornamen. Deshalb finden manche Engländer, dass man jemanden sehr gut kennen muss, um seinen bzw. ihren Familiennamen zu kennen!

9 Did you know? Haben Sie's gewusst?

Welches Wort wird vor allem in England statt friend oft verwendet?

- ☐ a bloke ☐ b chap ☐ c mate

My new friend

by Anna Marten

In the past it was difficult to find old friends. There was no internet, email or social media. Now reunions¹ are easy to organise – of families, school and university friends, colleagues, or old neighbours. I usually go to reunions, and I have had some interesting experiences².

People change: Some of my old friends are bald and overweight now, and some were overweight when we were at school and are now slim and attractive. Some of my old friends were arrogant and are now sensitive and thoughtful.

I don't know if people will recognise³ me. I wasn't sporty at school but I am now. When I was at school I didn't work hard but now I am an ambitious professional and have a good job and a nice flat. But I still worry about some things. Will my friends think I am interesting? Will we be friends now? Will we have things to talk about? Will they have more money, more children and bigger houses? But sometimes there can be a surprise and I make a new friend. At one reunion, I met Celia, who was my teacher when I was at school. Then I thought she was old and boring, but now she is a friend who is great fun!

I used to worry about reunions but now I love going to them and making new friends!
